A chef's dream mountain hideaway

Financial times October 9, 2021

The article tells the story of Fadri Arpagaus, a chef who first worked at Berghuus Radons in Switzerland as a child. Back then, it was a simple mountain inn, but his passion for hospitality and cuisine grew as he trained and worked in luxury hotels around the world. Now, at 38, he has returned to renovate and transform the old inn into a modern yet traditional gourmet retreat.

Arpagaus bought the building in 2020 during the pandemic, investing heavily in its renovation. The result is an intimate hotel with only 12 rooms, featuring spacious interiors, regional cuisine, and stunning mountain views. The hotel offers a unique combination of comfort, tradition, and natural beauty, attracting skiers and nature lovers alike.

He emphasizes local sourcing, sustainability, and creating a relaxed atmosphere where guests can enjoy the mountain environment. Despite the challenges of COVID-19, Arpagaus's passion and vision have turned the Berghuus into a special mountain hideaway that celebrates both culinary excellence and breathtaking scenery.
