

It tastes best in the mountains

Fadri and Jörg rely on ingredients that have been freshly picked and plates that convince not with decoration, but content. Quality at world-class level, but authentic.

Quiet luxury. Also on the plate.

Only what is ripened in the Graubünden sun, grown on the alp and produced in the valley, has the typical Berghuus aroma, which actually does not need much more. That's why our classics, such as Fadri's Salsiz, Capuns or veal chop taste heavenly as they are.

Natural, genuine, irresistible.
That is the Berghuus principle.

Japanese delicacy meets Swiss taste

Berghuus Wagyu / Andreas Stgier

When Fadri heard about Andreas' plan to pair a Japanese Wagyu with the Swiss Brown breed, he was immediately intrigued. Until now, he had not seen anything similar in all of Graubünden. Wagyu stands for tenderness, Swiss Brown for taste, and indeed the first taste has already convinced everyone. Fadri secured the exclusive rights to the breed and makes use of the entire product in the Berghuus kitchen.

Butcher craft with 80 years of tradition

David Steier / Metzgerei Peduzzi

The local butcher learned his trade from scratch and is the third generation to take over the family business, which has existed since 1938. Almost eighty years of experience characterize the quality above all. Even today, David still does many things that other butchers have stopped doing a long time ago. For example, the beef on the bone matures for five weeks so that it does not dry out and lose its flavour. An absolute insider tip is the double veal chop.

The best cheese comes from happy goats

Dino Balestra

"My goats are calling, I have to go!" is written on Dino Balestra's T-shirt.

The young cheesemaker, who took over the family business from his father just a few years ago, smiles. But anyone who has tasted his legendary Geissziger knows that Dino is actually quite serious. The well-being of his goats comes first for Dino and his partner Kathrin Riederer.

This can be seen by anyone who visits their lively chamois-colored mountain and Saanen goats on the Tignas Alp, watches the cheesemakers milking them, and then observes how the fresh cheese truckles are first carefully stored in the in-house cellar, then turned, and finally matured into unique cheese specialties.

Homemade

Berghuus Radons

Over the years, our Swiss chefs have safeguarded the respect for plants and animals as well as a dignified production. Both know: Quality starts with the living. That's why they leave nothing to chance when selecting their products and make everything themselves, from the salsiz to the daily cakes to the Swiss stone pine schnapps.

Your host, Fadri Arpagaus
